the 1990s, the number of people in the UK who are aged 65 and over has increased by 1.5 million, and the number of people aged 75 and over has increased by 1.2 million (Office for National Statistics 2000). The number of people aged 65 and over is projected to increase to 6.5 million by 2020, and the number of people aged 75 and over to 4.5 million (Office for National Statistics 2000).

There is a growing awareness of the need to develop strategies to meet the needs of the ageing population. The Department of Health (1999) has published a strategy for ageing, which sets out the government's commitment to improve the lives of older people. The strategy is based on three main principles: (1) to ensure that older people have the opportunity to live independently and actively; (2) to ensure that older people have access to the services and support they need; and (3) to ensure that older people are treated with respect and dignity.

the 1990s, the number of people in the world who are under 15 years of age has increased by 1.2 billion, from 1.1 billion in 1980 to 2.3 billion in 1999. The number of children under 15 years of age in the world is projected to increase to 3.1 billion by 2015, with the largest increases occurring in the developing world (United Nations, 1999).

There is a growing awareness of the need to address the needs of children in the world, and the importance of ensuring that they have access to basic services such as education, health care, and nutrition. The United Nations has established the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs), which are a set of eight goals that are intended to be achieved by the year 2015. The first goal is to eradicate extreme poverty and hunger, and the second goal is to achieve universal primary education.

The importance of ensuring that children have access to basic services is highlighted by the fact that in many developing countries, a large proportion of the population is under 15 years of age. In 1999, for example, 29% of the population in the world was under 15 years of age, and this proportion is projected to increase to 31% by 2015 (United Nations, 1999).

One of the key challenges in ensuring that children have access to basic services is the need to address the needs of children in the world who are living in poverty. In many developing countries, a large proportion of the population is living in poverty, and this is often the case for children. In 1999, for example, 1.1 billion people in the world were living on less than $1 per day, and this number is projected to increase to 1.2 billion by 2015 (United Nations, 1999).

Another key challenge is the need to address the needs of children in the world who are living in conflict-affected areas. In many developing countries, there is a high level of conflict, and this often leads to the displacement of large numbers of people. In 1999, for example, there were 25 million people in the world who were displaced as a result of conflict, and this number is projected to increase to 30 million by 2015 (United Nations, 1999).

Despite these challenges, there are many people and organizations who are working to ensure that children have access to basic services. The United Nations is one of the leading organizations in this field, and it has established a number of programs and initiatives that are aimed at improving the lives of children in the world. The Millennium Development Goals are a key part of this work, and they provide a framework for measuring progress in this area.

There are many other organizations and individuals who are also working to improve the lives of children in the world. The World Bank, for example, has established a number of programs and initiatives that are aimed at improving the lives of children in the world. The Bill & Melinda Gates Foundation is another organization that is working to improve the lives of children in the world, and it has established a number of programs and initiatives that are aimed at improving the lives of children in the world.

There are many other individuals who are also working to improve the lives of children in the world. The United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) is one of the leading organizations in this field, and it has established a number of programs and initiatives that are aimed at improving the lives of children in the world. The World Health Organization (WHO) is another organization that is working to improve the lives of children in the world, and it has established a number of programs and initiatives that are aimed at improving the lives of children in the world.

The United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) is one of the leading organizations in this field, and it has established a number of programs and initiatives that are aimed at improving the lives of children in the world. The World Food Programme (WFP) is another organization that is working to improve the lives of children in the world, and it has established a number of programs and initiatives that are aimed at improving the lives of children in the world.

the 1990s, the number of people in the UK who are employed in the public sector has increased by 1.5 million (from 2.5 million in 1980 to 4 million in 1995).

There is a growing emphasis on the need to improve the efficiency of public services, and to ensure that the public sector is able to deliver the services that are required in a cost-effective manner. This has led to a number of initiatives, including the introduction of competition, the restructuring of public services, and the introduction of performance targets.

The following sections of the paper discuss the impact of these initiatives on the public sector, and the implications for the future.

2. The public sector

The public sector is the part of the economy that is owned and controlled by the state. It includes a wide range of services, including health, education, and social services.

The public sector is a major part of the economy, and its performance is a key indicator of the health of the country. It is therefore important to understand the factors that affect its performance, and to develop strategies to improve it.

The following sections of the paper discuss the factors that affect the performance of the public sector, and the implications for the future.

3. Factors affecting performance

The performance of the public sector is affected by a number of factors, including the quality of the services provided, the efficiency of the management, and the availability of resources.

The following sections of the paper discuss the factors that affect the performance of the public sector, and the implications for the future.

4. Quality of services

The quality of the services provided by the public sector is a key factor in determining its performance. It is important to ensure that the services are of a high standard, and that they are delivered in a timely and efficient manner.

The following sections of the paper discuss the factors that affect the quality of the services provided by the public sector, and the implications for the future.

5. Efficiency of management

The efficiency of the management of the public sector is a key factor in determining its performance. It is important to ensure that the management is effective, and that it is able to deliver the services in a cost-effective manner.

The following sections of the paper discuss the factors that affect the efficiency of the management of the public sector, and the implications for the future.

6. Availability of resources

The availability of resources is a key factor in determining the performance of the public sector. It is important to ensure that there are sufficient resources available to deliver the services, and that they are used in a cost-effective manner.

The following sections of the paper discuss the factors that affect the availability of resources, and the implications for the future.

7. Conclusion

The public sector is a major part of the economy, and its performance is a key indicator of the health of the country. It is therefore important to understand the factors that affect its performance, and to develop strategies to improve it.
