the 1990s, the number of people in the UK who are employed in the public sector has increased by 1.5 million, from 2.5 million in 1980 to 4 million in 1995 (Department of Health 1996).

There is a growing emphasis on the need to improve the efficiency of the public sector, and to ensure that the public sector is able to deliver the services that are required by the public. This has led to a number of initiatives, including the introduction of competition, the restructuring of public services, and the introduction of new management practices.

One of the main challenges facing the public sector is the need to improve the efficiency of the services that it provides. This is a complex task, and it requires a number of different approaches. One of the most important is the introduction of competition, which can help to drive down costs and improve the quality of services.

Another important approach is the restructuring of public services, which can help to eliminate duplication and improve the way in which services are delivered. This can be done in a number of ways, including the merging of different departments or agencies, and the introduction of new management practices.

Finally, it is also important to introduce new management practices, which can help to improve the way in which public services are managed. This can include the introduction of new financial management systems, and the use of new technologies to improve the way in which services are delivered.

There are a number of other initiatives that are being undertaken to improve the efficiency of the public sector, and it is likely that these will continue to be developed in the future. It is important to ensure that these initiatives are implemented effectively, and that they are able to deliver the services that are required by the public.

The public sector is a complex and challenging environment, and it is important to ensure that it is able to deliver the services that are required by the public. This requires a number of different approaches, and it is likely that these will continue to be developed in the future.
