the 1990s, the number of people in the world who are under 15 years of age is expected to increase by 1.5 billion (United Nations 1994).

There is a growing awareness of the need to develop a new generation of young people who are able to deal with the challenges of the 21st century. This has led to a number of initiatives aimed at promoting the development of young people's skills and attitudes. One of the most prominent of these is the United Nations' World Education Forum (1994), which has set out a vision for the education of young people in the 21st century.

The World Education Forum has identified four key areas of focus for the education of young people in the 21st century: (1) the development of young people's basic skills and knowledge; (2) the development of young people's attitudes and values; (3) the development of young people's ability to learn; and (4) the development of young people's ability to participate in society.

The World Education Forum has also identified four key areas of focus for the education of young people in the 21st century: (1) the development of young people's basic skills and knowledge; (2) the development of young people's attitudes and values; (3) the development of young people's ability to learn; and (4) the development of young people's ability to participate in society.
