the 1990s, the number of people with a mental health problem has increased by 50% (Mental Health Foundation, 2000).

There is a growing awareness of the need to address the needs of people with mental health problems. The Department of Health (2000) has set out a vision for the future of mental health care, which includes a commitment to 'improving the lives of people with mental health problems'.

The Department of Health (2000) has also set out a number of key principles for the future of mental health care, which include:

- 'People with mental health problems should be treated as individuals, with their own needs and wishes taken into account.'
- 'People with mental health problems should be given the opportunity to participate in decisions about their care and treatment.'

The Department of Health (2000) has also set out a number of key objectives for the future of mental health care, which include:

- 'To reduce the number of people with mental health problems who are admitted to hospital.'
- 'To improve the quality of life for people with mental health problems.'

The Department of Health (2000) has also set out a number of key strategies for the future of mental health care, which include:

- 'To develop a range of services that meet the needs of people with mental health problems.'
- 'To improve the training and skills of mental health professionals.'

The Department of Health (2000) has also set out a number of key measures for the future of mental health care, which include:

- 'To develop a range of services that meet the needs of people with mental health problems.'

the 1990s, the number of people in the UK who are employed in the public sector has increased by 1.5 million (from 2.5 million in 1980 to 4 million in 1998) and the number of people in the public sector who are employed in the health sector has increased by 1.2 million (from 1.3 million in 1980 to 2.5 million in 1998) (Department of Health 1999).

There is a growing emphasis on the need to improve the quality of care provided by the public sector. This has led to a number of initiatives, including the introduction of the Health Care Act 1999, which sets out the framework for the regulation of health care providers. The Act requires health care providers to register with the Health Care Commission, which is responsible for monitoring and improving the quality of care provided by health care providers.

The Health Care Commission has a number of functions, including the following:

- To monitor and improve the quality of care provided by health care providers.
- To investigate complaints about health care providers.
- To provide advice and guidance to health care providers.
- To publish information about the quality of care provided by health care providers.

The Health Care Commission has a number of powers, including the following:

- To require health care providers to provide information about the quality of care provided by health care providers.
- To require health care providers to improve the quality of care provided by health care providers.
- To require health care providers to pay compensation to patients who have been harmed by health care providers.

There is a growing awareness of the need to address the needs of older people in the UK. The Department of Health (1999) has published a strategy for older people, which sets out the government's commitment to improve the lives of older people. The strategy is based on three main principles: (1) to ensure that older people have the opportunity to live independently and actively; (2) to ensure that older people have access to the services and support they need; and (3) to ensure that older people are treated with respect and dignity.

The public sector is a complex and diverse entity, and it is difficult to define it precisely. However, it can be described as the part of the economy that is owned and controlled by the state. It includes a wide range of activities, from the provision of social services to the operation of public utilities. The public sector is a major source of employment in the UK, and it plays a significant role in the economy.

There is a growing emphasis on the need to improve the quality of care in the public sector. The Department of Health (1996) has set out a number of key objectives for the public sector, including the need to improve the quality of care, to reduce waiting times, to improve the efficiency of the system, and to improve the responsiveness of the system to the needs of patients.

One of the key challenges facing the public sector is the need to improve the quality of care. This is a complex task, as it involves a number of factors, including the quality of the staff, the quality of the facilities, and the quality of the services. the 1990s, the number of people in the UK who are aged 65 and over has increased from 10.5 million to 13.5 million, and the number of people aged 75 and over has increased from 4.5 million to 6.5 million (Office for National Statistics 2000). The number of people aged 65 and over is projected to increase to 16.5 million by 2020, and the number of people aged 75 and over to 8.5 million (Office for National Statistics 2000).

There is a growing awareness of the need to address the needs of older people in the UK. The Department of Health (1999) has published a strategy for older people, which sets out the government's commitment to improve the health and social care of older people. The strategy is based on three main principles: (1) to improve the health and social care of older people; (2) to ensure that older people are able to live independently and actively; and (3) to ensure that older people are able to participate in society.

the 1990s, the number of people in the UK who are aged 65 and over has increased by 1.5 million (1990–1999) and is projected to increase by a further 1.5 million by 2010 (Office of National Statistics 2000).

There is a growing awareness of the need to address the health care needs of the ageing population. The Department of Health (2000) has set out a strategy for the future of health care for older people. This strategy is based on the following principles:

- To ensure that older people have access to the services they need to live as well as possible.
- To ensure that older people are treated as individuals and not as a homogeneous group.

The strategy also sets out a number of key objectives for the future of health care for older people. These include:

The public sector has also become an important employer of women, with 50% of public sector employees being women in 1995 (compared with 40% in 1980).

There are a number of reasons why the public sector has become an important employer of women. First, the public sector has a high proportion of women in its workforce. This is due to a number of factors, including the fact that the public sector is a large employer of women in the health and social care sectors, which are traditionally female-dominated occupations.

Second, the public sector has a high proportion of women in its workforce because it is a sector that is open to women.
