the 1990s, the number of people in the world who are under 15 years of age has increased by 1.2 billion (United Nations 1999). The United Nations predicts that by the year 2025, the number of people under 15 years of age will increase to 2.5 billion (United Nations 1999). The United Nations also predicts that by the year 2025, the number of people aged 65 years and over will increase to 1.2 billion (United Nations 1999).

There are a number of factors that are likely to contribute to the increase in the number of people aged 65 years and over. One of the main factors is the increase in life expectancy. In 1990, the life expectancy at birth was 71 years for men and 76 years for women. By the year 2025, the life expectancy at birth is predicted to be 75 years for men and 80 years for women (United Nations 1999). This increase in life expectancy is due to a number of factors, including improvements in medical care, better nutrition, and a more active lifestyle.

Another factor that is likely to contribute to the increase in the number of people aged 65 years and over is the decrease in fertility. In 1990, the total fertility rate was 2.8 children per woman. By the year 2025, the total fertility rate is predicted to be 1.5 children per woman (United Nations 1999). This decrease in fertility is due to a number of factors, including a decrease in the number of children that women want to have, and a decrease in the number of children that women are able to have.

The increase in the number of people aged 65 years and over is a global phenomenon. In 1990, there were 400 million people aged 65 years and over in the world. By the year 2025, there are predicted to be 1.2 billion people aged 65 years and over in the world (United Nations 1999). This increase in the number of people aged 65 years and over is a significant challenge for many countries, particularly in the developing world.

One of the main challenges is the need for more social security and health care services for the elderly. In many countries, the elderly are not able to support themselves, and they need to rely on family members or the state for support. This is a significant burden for many countries, particularly in the developing world. In addition, the elderly need more health care services, particularly for chronic diseases and for mental health problems.

Another challenge is the need for more housing and transportation services for the elderly. In many countries, the elderly are not able to afford to live in their own homes, and they need to live in nursing homes or other facilities. This is a significant burden for many countries, particularly in the developing world. In addition, the elderly need more transportation services, particularly for those who are unable to drive.

The increase in the number of people aged 65 years and over is a significant challenge for many countries, particularly in the developing world. It is important that we take action to address this challenge, and that we ensure that the elderly are able to live a dignified and healthy life. This requires a combination of measures, including improvements in social security and health care services, and improvements in housing and transportation services.

One of the main measures that we can take is to improve social security and health care services for the elderly. This can be done in a number of ways, including by increasing the number of social security workers, and by increasing the number of health care workers. In addition, we can improve the quality of social security and health care services by providing more training and support for workers, and by ensuring that services are accessible to all elderly people.

Another measure that we can take is to improve housing and transportation services for the elderly. This can be done in a number of ways, including by providing more affordable housing, and by providing more transportation services. In addition, we can improve the quality of housing and transportation services by providing more training and support for workers, and by ensuring that services are accessible to all elderly people.

The public sector has become a major employer in the UK, and this has implications for the way in which the public sector is managed and the way in which it is funded.

The public sector is a complex organisation, and it is difficult to understand how it works. The public sector is made up of many different organisations, each of which has its own aims and objectives. The public sector is also funded by the government, and this has implications for the way in which it is managed and the way in which it is funded.
