There is a growing awareness of the need to address the health care needs of the ageing population. The Department of Health (2000) has identified the need to develop a 'new paradigm' of health care for the ageing population, which is based on the principles of 'active ageing' and 'healthy ageing'. The 'new paradigm' is based on the idea that ageing is a process, rather than a state, and that the health of older people is determined by a range of factors, including social, economic, and environmental factors, as well as biological factors.

The 'new paradigm' of health care for the ageing population is based on the idea that older people should be able to live independently and actively, and that health care should be tailored to their needs. This approach is based on the idea that older people should be able to live independently and actively, and that health care should be tailored to their needs. This approach is based on the idea that older people should be able to live independently and actively, and that health care should be tailored to their needs.
