There is a growing awareness of the need to address the health care needs of the ageing population. The Department of Health (2000) has set out a strategy for the future of health care for older people. The strategy is based on the following principles:

- To ensure that older people have access to the services they need to live as well as possible.
- To ensure that older people are treated as individuals and not as a homogeneous group.

The strategy also sets out a number of objectives for the future of health care for older people. These include:

- To improve the quality of life of older people.
- To reduce the inequalities in health care for older people.

The strategy also sets out a number of actions that need to be taken to achieve these objectives. These include:

- To improve the training of health care professionals in the care of older people.
- To improve the coordination of health care for older people.

There is a growing emphasis on the need to improve the efficiency of the public sector. This has led to a number of initiatives, including the introduction of competition, the restructuring of public services, and the introduction of performance targets. These initiatives have led to a number of changes in the way that public services are delivered, including the introduction of private sector management practices and the restructuring of public services.

The public sector has a number of advantages, including the fact that it is owned by the state and is therefore not subject to the same pressures as the private sector. It also has a number of disadvantages, including the fact that it is often less efficient than the private sector and is often subject to political interference.

The public sector is a complex and controversial issue. It is important to understand the advantages and disadvantages of the public sector in order to make informed decisions about the future of public services.
