the 1990s, the number of people in the UK who are employed in the public sector has increased by 1.5 million (from 2.5 million in 1980 to 4 million in 1999) (Department of Health 2000).

There is a growing emphasis on the need to improve the quality of care in the public sector. The Department of Health (2000) has set out a number of key objectives for the public sector, including the need to improve the quality of care, to reduce waiting times, to improve the efficiency of the system, and to improve the experience of patients and staff. The Department of Health (2000) has also set out a number of key principles for the public sector, including the need to be patient-centred, to be transparent, to be accountable, and to be fair.

The Department of Health (2000) has also set out a number of key strategies for the public sector, including the need to improve the quality of care, to reduce waiting times, to improve the efficiency of the system, and to improve the experience of patients and staff. the 1990s, the number of people in the world who are under 15 years of age has increased from 1.1 billion to 1.5 billion, and the number of people aged 65 and over has increased from 0.2 billion to 0.5 billion (United Nations, 1999). The number of people aged 65 and over is projected to increase to 1.1 billion by the year 2050 (United Nations, 1999).

There is a growing awareness of the need to develop strategies to meet the needs of the ageing population. The World Health Organization (WHO) has developed a 'Global Strategy on Ageing and Health' (WHO, 1999) which aims to 'enable older people to live lives of health, independence, dignity and self-fulfilment' (WHO, 1999, p. 1). The WHO strategy is based on the following principles:

- 'Ageing is a natural process and should not be seen as a problem' (WHO, 1999, p. 1).
- 'Older people should be seen as a resource, not a burden' (WHO, 1999, p. 1).
- 'Older people should be able to live independently and actively' (WHO, 1999, p. 1).

The WHO strategy also emphasizes the need to 'promote the health and well-being of older people' (WHO, 1999, p. 1).
