the 1990s, the number of people in the world who are under 15 years of age is expected to increase by 1.5 billion (United Nations 1994).

There is a growing awareness of the need to address the needs of children in the 1990s. The United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) has been instrumental in this regard, and has produced a number of reports and guidelines for the development of child care services (UNICEF 1990, 1991, 1992, 1993).

The purpose of this paper is to review the current state of knowledge about child care services, and to discuss the implications for policy and practice. The paper is organized into four sections: (1) a review of the current state of knowledge about child care services; (2) a discussion of the implications for policy and practice; (3) a discussion of the implications for research; and (4) a conclusion.

The first section of the paper reviews the current state of knowledge about child care services. This section is organized into three sub-sections: (1) a review of the current state of knowledge about the needs of children; (2) a review of the current state of knowledge about the effectiveness of child care services; and (3) a review of the current state of knowledge about the costs of child care services.

The second section of the paper discusses the implications for policy and practice. This section is organized into three sub-sections: (1) a discussion of the implications for policy; (2) a discussion of the implications for practice; and (3) a discussion of the implications for research.

The third section of the paper discusses the implications for research. This section is organized into three sub-sections: (1) a discussion of the implications for basic research; (2) a discussion of the implications for applied research; and (3) a discussion of the implications for policy research.

The fourth section of the paper is a conclusion. This section summarizes the main findings of the paper, and discusses the implications for policy and practice.

The paper concludes that there is a need to address the needs of children in the 1990s. The United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) has been instrumental in this regard, and has produced a number of reports and guidelines for the development of child care services.

the 1990s, the number of people in the world who are under 15 years of age is expected to increase by 1.5 billion (United Nations 1994).

There is a growing awareness of the need to address the needs of children in the 1990s. The United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) has been instrumental in this regard, and has produced a series of reports on the state of the world's children (UNICEF 1990, 1991, 1992, 1993, 1994). These reports have highlighted the need for a new approach to children's rights, and have led to the adoption of the United Nations Convention on the Rights of the Child (UNCRC) in 1989.

The UNCRC is a landmark document in the history of children's rights. It sets out the rights of children, and provides a framework for the development of national legislation and policies. The Convention has been ratified by over 100 countries, and is now the most widely ratified human rights treaty in the world.

The UNCRC has led to a new focus on children's rights, and has provided a framework for the development of national legislation and policies. It has also led to a new awareness of the need to address the needs of children in the 1990s.
