the 1990s, the number of people in the UK who are employed in the public sector has increased by 1.5 million (1990–1999) and the number of people in the public sector has increased by 2.5 million (1990–1999).

There is a growing emphasis on the need to improve the efficiency of the public sector. This has led to a number of initiatives, including the introduction of competition, the restructuring of public services, and the introduction of performance targets.

The following sections discuss the impact of these initiatives on the public sector and the implications for the future.

2. The public sector

The public sector is the part of the economy that is owned and controlled by the state. It includes a wide range of services, including health, education, and social services.

The public sector is a major employer in the UK, accounting for 15% of the total workforce. It is also a major source of revenue for the state, accounting for 25% of total government revenue.

The public sector has a long history of providing services to the public. It has been a major part of the welfare state since the 1940s, and has played a key role in the development of the UK.

In the 1990s, the public sector has been the focus of a number of initiatives aimed at improving its efficiency. These initiatives have included the introduction of competition, the restructuring of public services, and the introduction of performance targets.

The following sections discuss the impact of these initiatives on the public sector and the implications for the future.

2.1. Competition

The introduction of competition into the public sector has been a major initiative in the 1990s. This has led to a number of changes in the way that public services are provided.

One of the main changes has been the introduction of competition for the provision of public services. This has led to a number of new providers entering the market, and has led to a number of changes in the way that public services are provided.

Another major change has been the restructuring of public services. This has led to a number of new organizations being created, and has led to a number of changes in the way that public services are provided.
