the 1990s, the number of people in the UK who are employed in the public sector has increased by 1.5 million, from 2.5 million in 1980 to 4 million in 1999 (Department of Health 2000).

There is a growing emphasis on the importance of the public sector in the provision of health care, and the need to ensure that the public sector is able to meet the needs of the population. This has led to a number of initiatives, including the establishment of the National Health Service (NHS) in 1948, and the creation of the Department of Health in 1998. The NHS is a public sector organization that provides health care to the population of the UK. The Department of Health is a government department that is responsible for the health of the population of the UK.

The public sector is also responsible for the provision of social care services. Social care services are services that are provided to people who are unable to care for themselves. These services include residential care, day care, and home care.

The public sector is also responsible for the provision of mental health services. Mental health services are services that are provided to people who have a mental health problem. These services include counseling, therapy, and medication.

The public sector is also responsible for the provision of health promotion services. Health promotion services are services that are designed to help people to improve their health. These services include education, counseling, and lifestyle advice.

The public sector is also responsible for the provision of health research services. Health research services are services that are designed to help people to understand the causes of disease and how to prevent disease. These services include clinical research, basic research, and health services research.

The public sector is also responsible for the provision of health care services. Health care services are services that are provided to people who are ill or injured. These services include diagnosis, treatment, and rehabilitation.
