the 1990s, the number of people in the world who are under 15 years of age has increased by 1.2 billion (United Nations 1999).

There is a growing awareness of the need to address the needs of children in the 21st century. The United Nations Convention on the Rights of the Child (1989) states that children have the right to be heard in decisions that affect them. The United Nations Secretary-General, Kofi Annan, has called for a 'new global compact for children' (United Nations 1999).

The World Bank (1999) has identified the need for a 'new global compact for children' as one of the key challenges facing the world in the 21st century.

the 1990s, the number of people in the UK who are employed in the public sector has increased by 1.5 million (from 2.5 million in 1980 to 4 million in 1995). The public sector has become a major employer in the UK, and this has implications for the way in which the public sector is managed and the way in which it is funded.

The public sector is a complex organisation, and it is difficult to understand how it works. The public sector is made up of many different organisations, each of which has its own aims and objectives. The public sector is also a major employer in the UK, and this has implications for the way in which the public sector is managed and the way in which it is funded.

There is a growing awareness of the need to develop strategies to meet the needs of the ageing population. The Department of Health (1999) has published a strategy for ageing, which sets out the government's commitment to improve the lives of older people. The strategy is based on three main principles: (1) to ensure that older people have the opportunity to live independently and actively; (2) to ensure that older people have access to the services and support they need; and (3) to ensure that older people are treated with respect and dignity.

The strategy is based on the following assumptions: (1) that older people are a valuable resource; (2) that older people have the right to live independently and actively; (3) that older people have the right to access the services and support they need; and (4) that older people should be treated with respect and dignity. The strategy sets out a range of measures to be taken to improve the lives of older people, including: (1) to improve the physical environment; (2) to improve the social environment; (3) to improve the financial environment; and (4) to improve the health and social care environment.

There is a growing awareness of the need to address the health and social care needs of older people. The Department of Health (2000) has published a strategy for older people, which sets out the government's commitment to improve the health and social care of older people. The strategy is based on three main principles: (1) to improve the health and social care of older people; (2) to ensure that older people are able to live independently; and (3) to ensure that older people are able to participate in society.

There is a growing awareness of the need to develop strategies to meet the needs of the ageing population. The Department of Health (1999) has identified the need to develop a 'new paradigm' of care for the ageing population, which is based on the principles of 'active ageing'. This paradigm is based on the idea that ageing is a process, and that people should be encouraged to remain active and engaged in their communities. The Department of Health (1999) has identified a number of key areas for action, including: (1) promoting healthy ageing; (2) supporting people to remain in their own homes; (3) providing social and community services; and (4) ensuring that people have access to the services they need.

The Department of Health (1999) has also identified a number of key challenges that need to be addressed in order to develop a new paradigm of care for the ageing population. These challenges include: (1) the need to develop a workforce that is skilled in working with older people; (2) the need to develop a range of services that meet the needs of older people; and (3) the need to ensure that people have access to the services they need. The Department of Health (1999) has identified a number of key strategies that need to be implemented in order to address these challenges.
