the 1990s, the number of people in the world who are under 15 years of age is expected to increase by 1.5 billion (United Nations 1994).

There is a growing awareness of the need to address the needs of children in the 1990s. The United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) has been instrumental in this regard, and has produced a series of reports on the state of the world's children (UNICEF 1990, 1991, 1992, 1993, 1994). These reports have highlighted the need for a new approach to children's rights, and have led to the adoption of the United Nations Convention on the Rights of the Child (UNCRC) in 1989.

The UNCRC is a landmark document in the history of children's rights. It is the first time that children have been recognized as individuals with rights, and not just as passive recipients of adult care. The UNCRC sets out a range of rights for children, including the right to life, the right to education, the right to health, and the right to participate in decisions that affect them.

The UNCRC has been ratified by over 100 countries, and is now the most widely accepted international instrument for the protection of children's rights. It provides a framework for the development of national laws and policies, and for the monitoring of progress in the implementation of children's rights.

One of the key challenges in the implementation of the UNCRC is the need to ensure that children's rights are protected in all circumstances, and not just in the context of the family. This requires a new approach to the protection of children's rights, one that recognizes the need for a multi-sectoral approach, involving the participation of all sectors of society.

The need for a new approach to children's rights is also reflected in the growing awareness of the need to address the needs of children in the 1990s. The United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) has been instrumental in this regard, and has produced a series of reports on the state of the world's children (UNICEF 1990, 1991, 1992, 1993, 1994).

the 1990s, the number of people in the world who are under 15 years of age is expected to increase by 1.5 billion (United Nations 1994).

There is a growing awareness of the need to address the needs of children in the 21st century. The United Nations Convention on the Rights of the Child (1989) has been signed by 113 countries, and the United Nations has established the Committee on the Rights of the Child to monitor the implementation of the Convention. The Convention sets out the rights of children, including the right to education, health, and a standard of living adequate for their physical, mental, and social development.

The United Nations has also established the World Summit on Children, which was held in 1990 in Geneva. The Summit resulted in the Declaration on the Rights and Responsibilities of the Adolescent, which sets out the rights and responsibilities of adolescents.

The Declaration states that adolescents have the right to education, health, and a standard of living adequate for their physical, mental, and social development. It also states that adolescents have the responsibility to respect the rights of others and to contribute to the development of their communities.

The Declaration also states that adolescents have the right to participate in decisions that affect their lives. It also states that adolescents have the responsibility to respect the rights of others and to contribute to the development of their communities.
