the 1990s, the number of people in the UK who are aged 65 and over has increased by 1.5 million, and the number of people aged 75 and over has increased by 1 million (Office for National Statistics 2000). The number of people aged 65 and over is projected to increase to 6.5 million by 2020, and the number of people aged 75 and over to 3.5 million (Office for National Statistics 2000). The increase in the number of people aged 65 and over is expected to be due to a combination of factors, including a decline in the birth rate, a decline in the death rate, and a decline in the rate of emigration.

The increase in the number of people aged 65 and over is expected to have a significant impact on the UK's economy and society. The increase in the number of people aged 65 and over is expected to lead to a decline in the number of people in the workforce, which will lead to a decline in the number of people who are able to pay taxes. This will lead to a decline in the amount of money that is available to the government to spend on public services, including health care and education. The increase in the number of people aged 65 and over is also expected to lead to a decline in the number of people who are able to work, which will lead to a decline in the number of people who are able to contribute to the economy.

The increase in the number of people aged 65 and over is also expected to have a significant impact on the UK's health care system. The increase in the number of people aged 65 and over is expected to lead to a decline in the number of people who are able to pay for health care, which will lead to a decline in the amount of money that is available to the government to spend on health care. This will lead to a decline in the quality of health care, which will lead to a decline in the number of people who are able to live healthy lives. The increase in the number of people aged 65 and over is also expected to lead to a decline in the number of people who are able to work, which will lead to a decline in the number of people who are able to contribute to the economy.

The increase in the number of people aged 65 and over is also expected to have a significant impact on the UK's education system. The increase in the number of people aged 65 and over is expected to lead to a decline in the number of people who are able to pay for education, which will lead to a decline in the amount of money that is available to the government to spend on education. This will lead to a decline in the quality of education, which will lead to a decline in the number of people who are able to live healthy lives. The increase in the number of people aged 65 and over is also expected to lead to a decline in the number of people who are able to work, which will lead to a decline in the number of people who are able to contribute to the economy.

The increase in the number of people aged 65 and over is also expected to have a significant impact on the UK's housing market. The increase in the number of people aged 65 and over is expected to lead to a decline in the number of people who are able to pay for housing, which will lead to a decline in the amount of money that is available to the government to spend on housing. This will lead to a decline in the quality of housing, which will lead to a decline in the number of people who are able to live healthy lives. the 1990s, the number of people in the UK who are employed in the public sector has increased by 1.5 million (from 2.5 million in 1980 to 4 million in 1995). The public sector has become a major employer in the UK, and this has implications for the way in which the public sector is managed and the way in which it is funded.

The public sector is a complex organisation, and it is difficult to understand how it works. The public sector is made up of many different organisations, each of which has its own aims and objectives. The public sector is also funded by the government, and this has implications for the way in which it is managed and the way in which it is funded.
