the 1990s, the number of people in the world who are under 15 years of age is expected to increase by 1.5 billion (United Nations 1994).

There is a growing awareness of the need to address the needs of children in the 1990s. The United Nations has developed the Convention on the Rights of the Child (1989) and the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) has developed the Innocent Initiative (1990). the 1990s, the number of people in the world who are under 15 years of age is expected to increase by 1.5 billion (United Nations 1994).

There is a growing awareness of the need to address the needs of children in the 1990s. The United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) has been instrumental in this regard, and has produced a series of reports on the state of the world's children (UNICEF 1990, 1991, 1992, 1993, 1994). These reports have highlighted the need for a new approach to children's rights, one that is based on the principle of the best interests of the child.

The United Nations Convention on the Rights of the Child (UNCRC) is a landmark document in this regard. It was adopted by the United Nations General Assembly in 1989, and is the first time in history that a treaty has been signed by more than 100 countries. The UNCRC sets out the rights of children, and provides a framework for the development of national laws and policies to protect and promote these rights.

The UNCRC is a comprehensive document, covering a wide range of issues. It includes provisions on the right to life, the right to a name and nationality, the right to a family, the right to education, the right to health, and the right to protection from abuse and exploitation. It also includes provisions on the right to participate in decisions that affect them, and the right to be heard in legal proceedings.

The UNCRC is a landmark document, and it is hoped that it will lead to a new era of respect for children's rights. It is a document that should be read and studied by all who are concerned with the welfare of children. It is a document that should be used as a guide to the development of national laws and policies, and as a basis for the work of governments, parents, and the community.

The first of these is the fact that the world is not a uniform whole, but a collection of diverse and often conflicting interests. The second is the fact that the world is not a static entity, but a dynamic one, constantly changing and evolving. The third is the fact that the world is not a simple system, but a complex one, with many interconnected parts and processes. The fourth is the fact that the world is not a single entity, but a collection of many different entities, each with its own unique characteristics and needs. The fifth is the fact that the world is not a single system, but a collection of many different systems, each with its own unique characteristics and needs. The sixth is the fact that the world is not a single entity, but a collection of many different entities, each with its own unique characteristics and needs. The eighth is the fact that the world is not a single entity, but a collection of many different entities, each with its own unique characteristics and needs. The ninth is the fact that the world is not a single system, but a collection of many different systems, each with its own unique characteristics and needs. The tenth is the fact that the world is not a single entity, but a collection of many different entities, each with its own unique characteristics and needs.

the 1990s, the number of people in the world who are under 15 years of age is expected to increase by 1.5 billion (United Nations 1994).

There is a growing awareness of the need to address the needs of children in the 1990s. The United Nations has set out a series of goals for children in the 1990s, including the goal of 'improving the quality of life for children' (United Nations 1994). This goal is reflected in the United Nations Convention on the Rights of the Child (United Nations 1989), which is the most widely ratified human rights treaty in the world.

The United Nations Convention on the Rights of the Child (United Nations 1989) is a landmark document in the history of children's rights. It sets out the rights of children in a comprehensive and legally binding way. The Convention is based on the principle that children are not just passive recipients of care, but active participants in their own lives.
