the 1990s, the number of people in the world who are under 15 years of age is expected to increase by 1.5 billion (United Nations 1994).

There is a growing awareness of the need to address the needs of children in the 1990s. The United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) has been instrumental in this regard, and has produced a series of reports on the state of the world's children (UNICEF 1990, 1991, 1992, 1993, 1994). These reports have highlighted the need for a new approach to children's rights, one that is based on the principle of the best interests of the child.

The United Nations Convention on the Rights of the Child (UNCRC) is a landmark document in this regard. It was adopted by the United Nations General Assembly in 1989, and has been ratified by over 100 countries. The UNCRC sets out a series of rights for children, including the right to life, the right to health, the right to education, and the right to participate in decisions that affect them.

The UNCRC is a comprehensive document, and it covers a wide range of issues. It is a landmark document in the history of children's rights, and it has been instrumental in bringing about a new approach to children's rights.

the 1990s, the number of people in the UK who are employed in the public sector has increased by 1.5 million (from 2.5 million in 1980 to 4 million in 1995). The public sector has also become an important employer of women, with 50% of public sector employees being women in 1995 (Department of Social Security 1996).

There is a growing awareness of the need to improve the health of public sector employees, and the Department of Social Security has been instrumental in this regard. In 1995, the Department published a report on the health of public sector employees (Department of Social Security 1995). This report identified a number of health problems that were prevalent among public sector employees, and it set out a number of measures that should be taken to improve their health.

One of the measures that the Department has taken is to commission research into the health of public sector employees. This research has identified a number of health problems that are prevalent among public sector employees, and it has also identified a number of measures that should be taken to improve their health.
