the 1990s, the number of people in the world who are under 15 years of age has increased from 1.1 billion to 1.6 billion, and the number of people aged 65 and over has increased from 0.2 billion to 0.5 billion (United Nations 1999). The number of people aged 65 and over is projected to increase to 1.1 billion by the year 2050 (United Nations 1999).

There is a growing awareness of the need to address the needs of older people in the workplace. In the United Kingdom, the Department of Social Security (1998) has published a report on the needs of older people in the workplace. The report states that older people are a valuable resource in the workplace and that employers should be encouraged to employ older people. The report also states that older people should be given the same opportunities as younger people to advance in their careers. In the United States, the Age Discrimination in Employment Act (ADEA) of 1967 prohibits employers from discriminating against older people in the workplace. The ADEA also requires employers to provide reasonable accommodations for older people with disabilities.

There is a growing body of research on the needs of older people in the workplace. This research has shown that older people have a variety of needs, including the need for flexible work schedules, the need for training and development opportunities, and the need for social support. This research has also shown that older people are more likely to be employed in part-time or temporary positions than younger people. This research has also shown that older people are more likely to be employed in lower-paying jobs than younger people.

There is a growing need for research on the needs of older people in the workplace. This research should focus on the needs of older people in different types of workplaces, such as the public sector, the private sector, and the non-profit sector. This research should also focus on the needs of older people in different types of jobs, such as clerical jobs, technical jobs, and managerial jobs. This research should also focus on the needs of older people in different types of careers, such as career advancement and career change.

the 1990s, the number of people in the world who are under 15 years of age has increased from 1.1 billion to 1.6 billion, and the number of people aged 65 and over has increased from 0.2 billion to 0.5 billion (United Nations 1999). The number of people aged 65 and over is projected to increase to 1.1 billion by the year 2050 (United Nations 1999).

There is a growing awareness of the need to address the needs of older people in the workplace. In the United Kingdom, the Department of Social Security (1998) has published a report on the needs of older people in the workplace. The report states that older people are a valuable resource in the workplace and that employers should be encouraged to employ older people. The report also states that older people should be given the same opportunities as younger people to advance in their careers. In the United States, the Age Discrimination in Employment Act (ADEA) of 1967 prohibits employers from discriminating against older people in the workplace. The ADEA also requires employers to provide reasonable accommodations for older people with disabilities.

There is a growing body of research on the needs of older people in the workplace. This research has shown that older people have a variety of needs, including the need for flexible work schedules, the need for training and development opportunities, and the need for social support. This research has also shown that older people are more likely to be employed in part-time or temporary positions than younger people. This research has also shown that older people are more likely to be employed in lower-paying jobs than younger people.
