the 1990s, the number of people in the UK who are employed in the public sector has increased by 1.5 million (1990–1999) and the number of people in the private sector has increased by 2.5 million (1990–1999).

There is a growing emphasis on the need to improve the quality of care in the public sector. This has led to a number of initiatives, including the introduction of the National Patient Safety Agency (NPSA) in 2001, the introduction of the National Clinical Audit Programme in 2002, and the introduction of the National Framework for the Quality Improvement of Health Services in 2003.

The NPSA is a non-departmental public body which was established in 2001. Its main function is to promote and improve patient safety in the NHS. It does this by working with the NHS to identify and prevent risks to patient safety, and by providing advice and support to NHS organisations on how to improve patient safety.

The National Clinical Audit Programme is a programme of clinical audits which was established in 2002. Its main function is to improve the quality of clinical care in the NHS. It does this by working with NHS organisations to identify and improve areas of clinical care which are of poor quality.

The National Framework for the Quality Improvement of Health Services is a framework which was established in 2003. Its main function is to provide a common framework for the quality improvement of health services in the NHS. It does this by setting out the principles and standards for the quality improvement of health services.

The NHS is a large and complex organisation, and it is not possible to improve the quality of care in the NHS without improving the quality of the people who work in the NHS. This is why it is so important to focus on the quality of the people who work in the NHS.

The NHS is a public sector organisation, and it is therefore subject to the same constraints as other public sector organisations. This means that the NHS has to operate within a limited budget, and it has to provide services to the public at a cost that is as low as possible.

The NHS is also subject to the same pressures as other public sector organisations. This means that the NHS has to deal with a growing demand for services, and it has to deal with a growing need for resources.
