the 1990s, the number of people in the world who are under 15 years of age has increased from 1.1 billion to 1.5 billion. This increase is due to a combination of factors, including a decline in infant mortality rates, a rise in life expectancy, and a high birth rate in many developing countries.

The increase in the number of children in the world has led to a corresponding increase in the number of children in the United States. In 1990, there were 75 million children under 18 years of age in the United States. By 2000, this number had increased to 80 million.

The increase in the number of children in the United States has led to a corresponding increase in the number of children in the United Kingdom. In 1990, there were 6.5 million children under 18 years of age in the United Kingdom. By 2000, this number had increased to 7.5 million.

the 1990s, the number of people in the world who are under 15 years of age has increased from 1.1 billion to 1.5 billion. The number of people aged 65 and over has increased from 200 million to 350 million. The number of people aged 15–64 years has increased from 1.5 billion to 2.1 billion.

There are a number of factors that have contributed to the increase in the number of people in the world who are under 15 years of age. One of the main factors is the increase in the number of people who are surviving infancy. In the 1950s, only about 50% of children survived to the age of 5 years. Today, over 90% of children survive to the age of 5 years.

Another factor is the increase in the number of people who are surviving to the age of 15 years. In the 1950s, only about 20% of people survived to the age of 15 years. Today, over 80% of people survive to the age of 15 years.

The increase in the number of people in the world who are under 15 years of age is a result of a combination of factors. The most important factors are the increase in the number of people who are surviving infancy and the increase in the number of people who are surviving to the age of 15 years.

The first of these is the fact that the system is not a simple one. It is a complex system, and as such, it is not possible to understand it by looking at its parts in isolation. The system is a whole, and its behavior is determined by the interactions between its parts. This is a fundamental principle of systems thinking, and it is one that is often overlooked in traditional engineering and science.

The second of these is the fact that the system is not a static one. It is a dynamic system, and its behavior changes over time. This is another fundamental principle of systems thinking, and it is one that is often overlooked in traditional engineering and science.

The third of these is the fact that the system is not a linear one. It is a non-linear system, and its behavior is not predictable by simple linear models. This is another fundamental principle of systems thinking, and it is one that is often overlooked in traditional engineering and science.

The fourth of these is the fact that the system is not a closed one. It is an open system, and it interacts with its environment. This is another fundamental principle of systems thinking, and it is one that is often overlooked in traditional engineering and science.

the 1990s, the number of people in the world who are undernourished has increased from 600 million to 800 million (FAO 1996).

There is a growing awareness of the need to address the problem of undernourishment. The United Nations World Food Programme (WFP) has been established to coordinate international efforts to combat hunger. The WFP is the largest humanitarian organization in the world, with a budget of over $4 billion per year.

The WFP is currently working to reduce the number of undernourished people in the world by 50% by the year 2015.

One of the main reasons for the increase in undernourishment is the rapid population growth in the developing world.

Another major factor is the increasing demand for food, particularly in the form of meat and dairy products.

The WFP is currently working to address these issues by providing food aid to the most vulnerable populations.

It is also working to promote sustainable agriculture and to improve the nutritional status of the population.
