the 1990s, the number of people in the world who are under 15 years of age is expected to increase by 1.5 billion (United Nations 1994).

There is a growing awareness of the need to address the needs of children in the 1990s. The United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) has been instrumental in this regard, and has produced a series of reports on the state of the world's children (UNICEF 1990, 1991, 1992, 1993, 1994). These reports have highlighted the need for a new approach to children's rights, one that is based on the principle of the best interests of the child.

The United Nations Convention on the Rights of the Child (UNCRC) is a landmark document in this regard. It was adopted by the United Nations General Assembly in 1989, and is the first international treaty to be ratified by more than 100 countries. The UNCRC sets out a comprehensive framework of rights for children, and is a key reference point for child protection work.

The UNCRC is based on the principle of the best interests of the child. This principle is enshrined in Article 3 of the Convention, which states that 'in all actions concerning children, whether undertaken by public or private social welfare institutions, courts of law, administrative authorities or legislative bodies, the best interests of the child shall be a primary consideration'.

The UNCRC also sets out a range of specific rights for children, including the right to life, the right to a name and nationality, the right to a family, the right to education, and the right to be heard. These rights are designed to ensure that children are able to grow up in a safe and secure environment, and to reach their full potential.

The UNCRC is a key reference point for child protection work. It provides a framework for assessing the needs of children, and for developing strategies to meet those needs. It also provides a basis for monitoring and evaluating child protection work.

The UNCRC is a landmark document in the history of child protection. It is a testament to the commitment of the United Nations and its member states to the rights of children. It is a key reference point for child protection work, and a source of inspiration for those who seek to improve the lives of children.

The UNCRC is a landmark document in the history of children's rights. It is the first time that children have been recognized as individuals with rights, and not just as passive recipients of adult care. The UNCRC sets out a range of rights for children, including the right to life, the right to health, the right to education, and the right to participate in decisions that affect them.

The UNCRC has been ratified by over 100 countries, and is now the most widely accepted international instrument for the protection of children's rights. It provides a framework for the development of national laws and policies, and for the monitoring of progress in the implementation of children's rights.

One of the key challenges in the implementation of the UNCRC is the need to ensure that children's rights are protected in all circumstances, and not just in the context of the family. This requires a range of measures, including the strengthening of legal systems, the development of child protection services, and the promotion of a culture of respect for children's rights.

Another key challenge is the need to ensure that children's rights are protected in the context of the global economy. This requires a range of measures, including the strengthening of international law, the development of child labour laws, and the promotion of a culture of respect for children's rights.
