the 1990s, the number of people in the world who are under 15 years of age is expected to increase by 1.5 billion (United Nations 1994).

There is a growing awareness of the need to address the needs of children in the 1990s. The United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) has been instrumental in this regard, and has produced a series of reports on the state of the world's children (UNICEF 1990, 1991, 1992, 1993, 1994). These reports have highlighted the need for a new approach to children's rights, and have led to the adoption of the United Nations Convention on the Rights of the Child (UNCRC) in 1989.

The UNCRC is a landmark document in the history of children's rights. It is the first time that children have been recognized as individuals with rights, and not just as passive recipients of adult care. The UNCRC sets out a range of rights for children, including the right to life, the right to health, the right to education, and the right to participate in decisions that affect them.

The UNCRC has been ratified by over 100 countries, and is now the most widely accepted international instrument for the protection of children's rights. It provides a framework for the development of national laws and policies, and for the monitoring of progress in the implementation of children's rights.

One of the key challenges in the implementation of the UNCRC is the need to ensure that children's rights are protected in all circumstances. This includes the need to address the rights of children in conflict with the law, and the rights of children in need of special protection.

The UNCRC also sets out a range of principles that should guide the implementation of children's rights. These include the principle of non-discrimination, the principle of the best interests of the child, and the principle of the right to life.

The UNCRC is a landmark document in the history of children's rights. It provides a framework for the development of national laws and policies, and for the monitoring of progress in the implementation of children's rights. It is a document that should be read and studied by all who are concerned with the rights of children.
