the 1990s, the number of people in the UK who are employed in the public sector has increased by 1.5 million (1990–1999) (Department of Health 2000).

There is a growing emphasis on the need to improve the efficiency of the public sector, and to ensure that the public sector is able to deliver the services that are required in a cost-effective manner. This has led to a number of initiatives, including the introduction of competition, the restructuring of public sector organisations, and the introduction of performance measures.

The aim of this paper is to review the literature on the impact of these initiatives on the performance of the public sector, and to discuss the implications for the future.

The paper is organised as follows. Section 2 discusses the background to the initiatives, and Section 3 discusses the impact of the initiatives on the performance of the public sector.

Section 4 discusses the implications for the future, and Section 5 concludes the paper.

2. Background to the initiatives

The public sector in the UK has been the subject of a number of initiatives in the 1990s, including the introduction of competition, the restructuring of public sector organisations, and the introduction of performance measures.

The introduction of competition has been a major initiative, and has led to a number of changes in the way that public sector organisations operate.

One of the main changes has been the introduction of competition for the provision of public services. This has led to a number of public sector organisations being privatised, and to a number of public sector organisations being required to compete for contracts.

Another major change has been the restructuring of public sector organisations. This has led to a number of public sector organisations being merged, and to a number of public sector organisations being reorganised.

The introduction of performance measures has also been a major initiative, and has led to a number of changes in the way that public sector organisations are managed.

One of the main changes has been the introduction of performance targets. These targets are used to measure the performance of public sector organisations, and to ensure that they are able to deliver the services that are required in a cost-effective manner.

Another major change has been the introduction of performance measures for the staff of public sector organisations. These measures are used to measure the performance of individual staff members, and to ensure that they are able to deliver the services that are required in a cost-effective manner.

The impact of these initiatives on the performance of the public sector has been the subject of a number of studies. These studies have found that the initiatives have had a mixed impact on the performance of the public sector.

On the one hand, the initiatives have led to a number of improvements in the performance of the public sector. For example, the introduction of competition has led to a number of public sector organisations being able to deliver services more cost-effectively.

On the other hand, the initiatives have also led to a number of problems. For example, the introduction of competition has led to a number of public sector organisations being unable to deliver services in a cost-effective manner.

The restructuring of public sector organisations has also led to a number of problems. For example, the restructuring has led to a number of public sector organisations being unable to deliver services in a cost-effective manner.

The introduction of performance measures has also led to a number of problems. For example, the introduction of performance measures has led to a number of public sector organisations being unable to deliver services in a cost-effective manner.

3. Impact of the initiatives on the performance of the public sector

The impact of the initiatives on the performance of the public sector has been the subject of a number of studies. These studies have found that the initiatives have had a mixed impact on the performance of the public sector.

On the one hand, the initiatives have led to a number of improvements in the performance of the public sector. For example, the introduction of competition has led to a number of public sector organisations being able to deliver services more cost-effectively.

On the other hand, the initiatives have also led to a number of problems. For example, the introduction of competition has led to a number of public sector organisations being unable to deliver services in a cost-effective manner.

The introduction of performance measures has also led to a number of problems. For example, the introduction of performance measures has led to a number of public sector organisations being unable to deliver services in a cost-effective manner.

4. Implications for the future

The impact of the initiatives on the performance of the public sector has been the subject of a number of studies. These studies have found that the initiatives have had a mixed impact on the performance of the public sector.

On the one hand, the initiatives have led to a number of improvements in the performance of the public sector. For example, the introduction of competition has led to a number of public sector organisations being able to deliver services more cost-effectively.

the 1990s, the number of people in the world who are under 15 years of age is expected to increase by 1.5 billion (United Nations 1994).

There is a growing awareness of the need to address the needs of children in the 1990s. The United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) has been instrumental in this regard, and has produced a series of reports on the state of the world's children (UNICEF 1990, 1991, 1992, 1993, 1994). These reports have highlighted the need for a new approach to children's rights, one that is based on the principle of the best interests of the child.

The United Nations Convention on the Rights of the Child (UNCRC) is a landmark document in this regard. It was adopted by the United Nations General Assembly in 1989, and has been ratified by over 100 countries. The UNCRC sets out a series of rights for children, including the right to life, the right to health, the right to education, and the right to participate in decisions that affect them.

The UNCRC is a comprehensive document, and it covers a wide range of issues. It is a landmark document in the history of children's rights, and it has been instrumental in bringing about a new awareness of the needs of children in the 1990s.

the 1990s, the number of people in the world who are under 15 years of age is expected to increase by 1.5 billion (United Nations 1994).

There is a growing awareness of the need to address the needs of children in the 1990s. The United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) has been instrumental in this regard, and has produced a series of reports on the state of the world's children (UNICEF 1990, 1991, 1992, 1993, 1994). These reports have highlighted the need for a new approach to children's rights, and have led to the adoption of the United Nations Convention on the Rights of the Child (UNCRC) in 1989.

The UNCRC is a landmark document in the history of children's rights. It is the first time that children have been recognized as individuals with rights, and not just as passive recipients of adult care. The UNCRC sets out a range of rights for children, including the right to life, the right to education, the right to health, and the right to participate in decisions that affect them.

The UNCRC has been ratified by over 100 countries, and is now the most widely accepted international instrument for the protection of children's rights. It provides a framework for the development of national laws and policies, and for the monitoring of progress in the implementation of children's rights.

One of the key challenges in the implementation of the UNCRC is the need to ensure that children's rights are protected in all circumstances, and not just in the context of the family. This requires a new approach to children's rights, one that recognizes the need for a range of measures to be taken to protect children's rights in all areas of life.

The need for a new approach to children's rights is also reflected in the growing awareness of the need to address the needs of children in the 1990s.
