the 1990s, the number of people in the world who are under 15 years of age has increased by 1.2 billion (United Nations 1999). The United Nations predicts that by the year 2015, the number of people under 15 years of age will increase to 2.5 billion (United Nations 1999). The United Nations also predicts that by the year 2015, the number of people aged 65 years and over will increase to 1 billion (United Nations 1999).

There are a number of factors that are likely to contribute to the increase in the number of people aged 65 years and over. One of the main factors is the increase in life expectancy. In 1990, the life expectancy at birth was 71 years for men and 76 years for women. By the year 2015, the life expectancy at birth is predicted to be 75 years for men and 80 years for women (United Nations 1999). This increase in life expectancy is due to a number of factors, including improvements in medical care, better nutrition, and a more active lifestyle.

Another factor that is likely to contribute to the increase in the number of people aged 65 years and over is the decrease in fertility. In 1990, the fertility rate was 2.8 children per woman. By the year 2015, the fertility rate is predicted to be 1.5 children per woman (United Nations 1999). This decrease in fertility is due to a number of factors, including a decrease in the number of children that women want to have, and a decrease in the number of children that women are able to have.

The increase in the number of people aged 65 years and over is a global phenomenon. In 1990, there were 400 million people aged 65 years and over in the world. By the year 2015, there are predicted to be 1 billion people aged 65 years and over in the world (United Nations 1999). This increase in the number of people aged 65 years and over is a significant challenge for many countries, particularly in the developing world.

There are a number of challenges that are likely to arise from the increase in the number of people aged 65 years and over. One of the main challenges is the need for more social security. In many countries, the number of people aged 65 years and over is increasing faster than the number of people aged 15 years and under. This means that there will be a larger number of people who are dependent on social security than there will be people who are contributing to social security.

Another challenge is the need for more health care. As people age, they are more likely to have health problems. This means that there will be a larger number of people who need health care than there will be people who are able to pay for health care. This is a particular problem in the developing world, where health care is often expensive and of poor quality.

There are a number of ways in which the challenges of an ageing population can be addressed. One way is to increase the number of people who are contributing to social security. This can be done by increasing the number of people who are working, and by increasing the number of people who are paying into social security.

Another way is to improve the quality of health care. This can be done by increasing the number of health care workers, and by improving the quality of health care services. This is a particular priority in the developing world, where health care is often of poor quality.

There are a number of other ways in which the challenges of an ageing population can be addressed. These include increasing the number of people who are able to support themselves, and increasing the number of people who are able to live independently. These are all important goals, and they are all goals that can be achieved.

the 1990s, the number of people in the world who are under 15 years of age is expected to increase by 1.5 billion (United Nations 1994).

There is a growing awareness of the need to address the needs of children in the 1990s. The United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) has been instrumental in this regard, and has produced a series of reports on the state of the world's children (UNICEF 1990, 1991, 1992, 1993, 1994). These reports have highlighted the need for a new approach to children's rights, one that is based on the principle of the best interests of the child.

The United Nations Convention on the Rights of the Child (UNCRC) is a landmark document in this regard. It was adopted by the United Nations General Assembly in 1989, and has been ratified by over 100 countries. The UNCRC sets out a series of rights for children, including the right to life, the right to health, the right to education, and the right to participate in decisions that affect them.

The UNCRC is a comprehensive document, covering a wide range of issues. It is a landmark document in the history of children's rights, and it is a document that has inspired many other countries to develop their own child rights legislation.

The public sector has become a major employer in the UK, and this has implications for the way in which the public sector is managed and the way in which it is funded.

The public sector is a complex organisation, and it is difficult to understand how it works. The public sector is made up of many different organisations, each of which has its own aims and objectives. The public sector is also funded by the government, and this has implications for the way in which it is managed and the way in which it is funded.
