the 1990s, the number of people in the UK who are employed in the public sector has increased by 1.5 million (from 2.5 million in 1980 to 4 million in 1995). The public sector has become a major employer in the UK, and this has implications for the way in which the public sector is managed and the way in which it is funded.

The public sector is a complex organisation, and it is difficult to understand how it works. The public sector is made up of many different organisations, each of which has its own aims and objectives. The public sector is also a major employer in the UK, and this has implications for the way in which the public sector is managed and the way in which it is funded.

the 1990s, the number of people in the world who are under 15 years of age has increased by 1.2 billion (United Nations 1999). The number of children in the world is projected to increase to 2.5 billion by the year 2025 (United Nations 1999). The United Nations (1999) also predicts that the number of children in the world will increase to 3.5 billion by the year 2050.

There are a number of factors that are likely to contribute to the increase in the number of children in the world. One of the most important factors is the increase in the life expectancy of people in the world. As people live longer, they are more likely to have children. Another factor is the increase in the number of people who are in the reproductive age group (15-49 years of age). The number of people in this age group is projected to increase from 1.2 billion in 1990 to 2.5 billion in 2025 (United Nations 1999).

The increase in the number of children in the world is a major concern for many people. One of the reasons for this concern is that the increase in the number of children will place a greater burden on the world's resources. Another reason is that the increase in the number of children will lead to a greater demand for education and health care. The United Nations (1999) has identified a number of strategies that can be used to address the increase in the number of children in the world.

One of the most important strategies is to improve the health and education of women. When women are healthy and educated, they are more likely to have fewer children. Another strategy is to improve the economic situation of people in the world. When people are poor, they are more likely to have children. The United Nations (1999) has also identified a number of other strategies that can be used to address the increase in the number of children in the world.
