the 1990s, the number of people in the UK who are employed in the public sector has increased by 1.5 million (1990–1999) and the number of people in the private sector has increased by 1.7 million (1990–1999).

There is a growing emphasis on the need to improve the quality of care in the public sector. This has led to a number of initiatives, including the introduction of the Health Care Act 1999, which sets out the framework for the regulation of health care providers, and the introduction of the Health Care Act 2001, which sets out the framework for the regulation of health care workers.

The Health Care Act 1999 also introduced the concept of the 'NHS Trust', which is a body corporate established for the purpose of providing health care services. The NHS Trust is responsible for the management and operation of the health care services it provides.

The Health Care Act 2001 also introduced the concept of the 'Health Care Worker', which is a person who is employed by a health care provider and is responsible for the provision of health care services. The Health Care Worker is responsible for the management and operation of the health care services they provide.

The Health Care Act 2001 also introduced the concept of the 'Health Care Provider', which is a body corporate established for the purpose of providing health care services. The Health Care Provider is responsible for the management and operation of the health care services it provides.

The Health Care Act 2001 also introduced the concept of the 'Health Care Regulator', which is a body established for the purpose of regulating health care providers and health care workers.
