the 1990s, the number of people in the UK who are employed in the public sector has increased by 1.5 million (from 2.5 million in 1980 to 4 million in 1999). The public sector has become a major employer in the UK, and this has implications for the way in which the public sector is managed and for the way in which the public sector is funded.

The public sector is a complex organisation, and it is difficult to understand how it works. The public sector is made up of many different organisations, each of which has its own aims and objectives. The public sector is also a major employer in the UK, and this has implications for the way in which the public sector is managed and for the way in which the public sector is funded.

the 1990s, the number of people in the UK who are employed in the public sector has increased by 1.5 million (1990–1999) (Department of Health 2000).

There is a growing emphasis on the need to improve the efficiency of the public sector, and to ensure that the public sector is able to deliver the best possible value for money. This has led to a number of initiatives, including the introduction of competition, the restructuring of public services, and the introduction of new management practices.

One of the key challenges facing the public sector is the need to improve the quality of services. This is a complex task, as it involves a number of factors, including the quality of the staff, the quality of the facilities, and the quality of the services themselves.

One of the ways in which the quality of services can be improved is by introducing new management practices. This can include a number of things, such as the introduction of new systems of control, the introduction of new methods of recruitment, and the introduction of new methods of training.

Another way in which the quality of services can be improved is by introducing competition. This can be done in a number of ways, such as by allowing private companies to compete for public contracts, or by allowing public companies to compete with private companies.

Finally, the quality of services can be improved by restructuring public services. This can be done in a number of ways, such as by merging public services, or by transferring public services to private companies.

There are a number of challenges facing the public sector, and it is essential that these challenges are addressed if the public sector is to deliver the best possible value for money. This requires a combination of new management practices, competition, and restructuring.

There is a growing awareness of the need to develop strategies to meet the needs of the ageing population. The Department of Health (1999) has identified the need to develop a new paradigm of care for the ageing population, one that is based on the concept of 'active ageing'.

The concept of 'active ageing' is defined by the World Health Organization (1999) as:

...the process of developing and maintaining the functional abilities that enable people to participate in society to the greatest extent possible as they age (World Health Organization 1999).

There is a growing awareness of the need to develop strategies to meet the needs of the ageing population. The Department of Health (1999) has identified the need to develop a 'new paradigm' for the care of the elderly, which is based on the principles of 'active ageing'. This paradigm is based on the idea that ageing is a process, and that the needs of the elderly are not fixed, but change over time. The 'new paradigm' is based on the idea that the elderly should be able to live independently, and to participate in the community. This paradigm is based on the idea that the elderly should be able to live independently, and to participate in the community.

the 1990s, the number of people in the UK who are employed in the public sector has increased by 1.5 million (1990–1999) and the number of people in the public sector has increased by 2.5 million (1990–1999).

There is a growing emphasis on the need to improve the efficiency of the public sector. This has led to a number of initiatives, including the introduction of competition, the restructuring of public services, and the introduction of performance targets. These initiatives have led to a number of changes in the way that public services are delivered, including the introduction of private sector management practices and the restructuring of public services.

The public sector has a number of advantages, including the fact that it is owned by the state and is therefore able to provide services that are not profitable. It also has a number of disadvantages, including the fact that it is often inefficient and that it can be subject to political interference.

The public sector is a complex and controversial issue. It is important to understand the advantages and disadvantages of the public sector in order to make informed decisions about its future.

the 1990s, the number of people in the world who are living in poverty has increased from 1.2 billion to 1.6 billion (World Bank 1999).

There is a growing awareness of the need to address the needs of the world's poor. The United Nations Millennium Declaration (2000) states that the world's leaders have agreed to halve the number of people living in poverty by the year 2015. The United Nations Development Programme (2000) has identified eight Millennium Development Goals (MDGs) to be achieved by 2015.

The first MDG is to halve the number of people living in poverty. The second MDG is to achieve full and productive employment and decent work for all. The third MDG is to promote sustainable development.

The fourth MDG is to combat HIV/AIDS, malaria and other diseases. The fifth MDG is to achieve gender equality and empower women. The sixth MDG is to develop a global partnership for development.

The seventh MDG is to ensure environmental sustainability. The eighth MDG is to build a global partnership for development.

The MDGs are a set of targets that the world's leaders have agreed to achieve by 2015. They are a commitment to the world's poor and a commitment to the world's future.

There is a growing awareness of the need to address the health and social care needs of the ageing population. The Department of Health (2000) has set out a strategy for the NHS to meet the needs of the ageing population. The strategy is based on three main principles: (1) to ensure that the NHS is able to meet the needs of the ageing population; (2) to ensure that the NHS is able to provide a high quality of care; and (3) to ensure that the NHS is able to provide a range of services that meet the needs of the ageing population.

The Department of Health (2000) has set out a number of key objectives for the NHS to meet the needs of the ageing population. These objectives are: (1) to ensure that the NHS is able to provide a high quality of care; (2) to ensure that the NHS is able to provide a range of services that meet the needs of the ageing population; (3) to ensure that the NHS is able to provide a high level of patient safety; and (4) to ensure that the NHS is able to provide a high level of patient satisfaction.

The Department of Health (2000) has also set out a number of key actions for the NHS to meet the needs of the ageing population. These actions are: (1) to ensure that the NHS is able to provide a high quality of care; (2) to ensure that the NHS is able to provide a range of services that meet the needs of the ageing population; (3) to ensure that the NHS is able to provide a high level of patient safety; and (4) to ensure that the NHS is able to provide a high level of patient satisfaction.
