the 1990s, the number of people in the world who are undernourished has increased from 600 million to 800 million (FAO 2001). The number of people who are obese has increased from 100 million in 1975 to 300 million in 2000 (WHO 2000).

Obesity is a complex condition, with many causes. It is a result of an imbalance between energy intake and energy expenditure. The energy intake is determined by the amount of food and drink consumed, and the energy expenditure is determined by the amount of physical activity.

Obesity is a major public health problem, and it is important to understand the causes of obesity in order to develop effective interventions. This paper will review the current evidence on the causes of obesity, and will discuss the implications for public health.

Obesity and health

Obesity is a major risk factor for many chronic diseases, including heart disease, stroke, type 2 diabetes, and certain types of cancer. It is also associated with a higher risk of premature death.

The World Health Organization (WHO) defines obesity as a body mass index (BMI) of 30 or greater. BMI is a measure of body fat based on height and weight. It is calculated by dividing weight in kilograms by height in metres squared.

Obesity is a complex condition, and it is important to understand the causes of obesity in order to develop effective interventions. This paper will review the current evidence on the causes of obesity, and will discuss the implications for public health.

Causes of obesity

Obesity is a result of an imbalance between energy intake and energy expenditure. The energy intake is determined by the amount of food and drink consumed, and the energy expenditure is determined by the amount of physical activity.

There are many factors that can influence energy intake and energy expenditure. These factors include genetics, environment, and lifestyle. This paper will review the current evidence on the causes of obesity, and will discuss the implications for public health.

Genetics

Genetics plays a role in the development of obesity. Some people are genetically predisposed to obesity, and this predisposition can be influenced by environmental factors.

There are many genes that have been associated with obesity. These genes include the FTO gene, the MC4R gene, and the PPARG gene. The FTO gene is the most commonly associated gene with obesity, and it is located on chromosome 16.

The MC4R gene is located on chromosome 18, and it is associated with a higher risk of obesity. The PPARG gene is located on chromosome 3, and it is associated with a higher risk of obesity.

There are many other genes that have been associated with obesity, and it is likely that there are many more genes that have yet to be discovered. It is important to understand the genetic causes of obesity in order to develop effective interventions.

Environment

The environment plays a role in the development of obesity. The environment includes the physical environment, the social environment, and the cultural environment. The physical environment includes the availability of food and drink, and the availability of opportunities for physical activity.

The public sector is a complex organisation and it is difficult to measure its performance. There are a number of different ways of measuring the performance of the public sector and each of these has its own strengths and weaknesses.

One of the most common ways of measuring the performance of the public sector is by looking at the number of people who are employed in the public sector. This is a simple and easy way to measure performance and it is often used by the media and the public.

Another way of measuring the performance of the public sector is by looking at the number of people who are satisfied with the services that they receive. This is a more difficult way to measure performance and it is often used by the public sector itself.

A third way of measuring the performance of the public sector is by looking at the number of people who are in need of services. This is a more complex way to measure performance and it is often used by the public sector itself.

There are a number of other ways of measuring the performance of the public sector and each of these has its own strengths and weaknesses. It is important to use a range of different measures to get a complete picture of the performance of the public sector.

The public sector has become a major employer in the UK, and this has implications for the way in which the public sector is managed and the way in which it is funded.

The public sector is a complex organisation, and it is difficult to understand how it works. The public sector is made up of many different organisations, each of which has its own aims and objectives. The public sector is also funded by the government, and this has implications for the way in which it is managed and the way in which it is funded.

There is a growing emphasis on the need to improve the efficiency of the public sector, and to ensure that the public sector is able to deliver the services that are required by the public. This has led to a number of initiatives, including the introduction of competition, the restructuring of public sector organisations, and the introduction of performance measures. The aim of these initiatives is to ensure that the public sector is able to deliver the services that are required by the public, in a cost-effective and efficient manner.

The aim of this paper is to review the literature on the impact of these initiatives on the public sector, and to discuss the implications for the future of the public sector.

The paper is organised as follows. Section 2 discusses the impact of competition on the public sector. Section 3 discusses the impact of restructuring on the public sector. Section 4 discusses the impact of performance measures on the public sector. Section 5 discusses the implications for the future of the public sector.

2. Competition

The introduction of competition into the public sector has been a major initiative in the 1990s. This has led to a number of changes in the way that public sector organisations operate, and has led to a number of improvements in the efficiency of the public sector.

One of the main reasons for the introduction of competition is the need to ensure that the public sector is able to deliver the services that are required by the public, in a cost-effective and efficient manner. This has led to a number of initiatives, including the introduction of competition, the restructuring of public sector organisations, and the introduction of performance measures.

The introduction of competition has led to a number of changes in the way that public sector organisations operate. For example, public sector organisations have been encouraged to compete for contracts, and to improve their efficiency and effectiveness.

One of the main benefits of the introduction of competition is the reduction in costs. This has been achieved by a number of factors, including the reduction in the number of public sector organisations, the reduction in the number of public sector employees, and the reduction in the number of public sector contracts.

Another benefit of the introduction of competition is the improvement in the quality of services. This has been achieved by a number of factors, including the introduction of performance measures, the introduction of competition, and the introduction of restructuring.

There are a number of challenges associated with the introduction of competition. One of the main challenges is the need to ensure that the public sector is able to deliver the services that are required by the public, in a cost-effective and efficient manner.

Another challenge is the need to ensure that the public sector is able to maintain the quality of services. This has been achieved by a number of factors, including the introduction of performance measures, the introduction of competition, and the introduction of restructuring.

There are a number of implications for the future of the public sector. One of the main implications is the need to ensure that the public sector is able to deliver the services that are required by the public, in a cost-effective and efficient manner.
