the 1990s, the number of people in the UK who are aged 65 and over has increased by 1.5 million (1990–2000) and is projected to increase by a further 1.5 million by 2020 (Office for National Statistics 2001). The number of people aged 65 and over who are living alone has increased from 1.1 million in 1990 to 1.5 million in 2000 (Office for National Statistics 2001). The number of people aged 65 and over who are living alone is projected to increase to 2.1 million by 2020 (Office for National Statistics 2001).

There is a growing awareness of the need to address the needs of older people who are living alone. The Department of Health (2000) has identified the need to develop a national strategy for older people who are living alone. The strategy should focus on the needs of older people who are living alone and on the needs of their families and carers. The strategy should also focus on the needs of older people who are living alone and on the needs of their families and carers.

the 1990s, the number of people in the UK who are employed in the public sector has increased by 1.5 million (from 2.5 million in 1980 to 4 million in 1998). The public sector has become an important employer of people with mental health problems, and the number of people with mental health problems employed in the public sector has increased from 10,000 in 1980 to 20,000 in 1998 (Mental Health Foundation, 1999).

There is a growing emphasis on the importance of the public sector in providing services for people with mental health problems. The public sector is seen as the main provider of services for people with mental health problems, and it is expected that the public sector will continue to play a major role in the provision of services for people with mental health problems in the future. The public sector is also seen as the main provider of services for people with mental health problems who are in need of long-term care.

the 1990s, the number of people in the UK who are employed in the public sector has increased by 1.5 million (from 2.5 million in 1980 to 4 million in 1999). The public sector has become an important employer of people with mental health problems, and the number of people with mental health problems employed in the public sector has increased from 10,000 in 1980 to 20,000 in 1999 (Mental Health Foundation, 2000).

There is a growing awareness of the need to improve the mental health of people in the public sector, and the need to provide training and support to public sector employees. The Mental Health Foundation (2000) has identified a number of key areas for action, including: (1) the need to improve the mental health of public sector employees; (2) the need to provide training and support to public sector employees; (3) the need to improve the mental health of people in the public sector; and (4) the need to provide training and support to people in the public sector.

The purpose of this paper is to review the literature on the mental health of people in the public sector, and to identify the key areas for action. The paper is organized as follows: (1) a review of the literature on the mental health of people in the public sector; (2) a review of the literature on the need to provide training and support to public sector employees; (3) a review of the literature on the need to improve the mental health of people in the public sector; and (4) a review of the literature on the need to provide training and support to people in the public sector.

The public sector has become a major employer in the UK, and this has implications for the way in which the public sector is managed and the way in which it is funded.

The public sector is a complex and diverse entity, and it is difficult to define it precisely. However, it can be described as the part of the economy that is owned and controlled by the state. It includes a wide range of activities, from the provision of health care and education to the provision of social housing and the operation of public transport.

The public sector is a major source of employment in the UK, and it is also a major source of revenue for the state. The public sector is funded by a combination of taxes and borrowing, and it is responsible for the provision of a wide range of public services.

There is a growing awareness of the need to improve the mental health of people in the public sector. The Mental Health Foundation (2000) has identified a number of factors that can contribute to mental health problems in the public sector, including: high levels of stress, long hours, and a lack of control over one's work. The foundation has also identified a number of strategies that can be used to improve mental health in the public sector, including: providing training and support, creating a supportive work environment, and encouraging a healthy work/life balance.

The purpose of this paper is to explore the mental health of people in the public sector, and to identify the factors that can contribute to mental health problems. The paper will also discuss some of the strategies that can be used to improve mental health in the public sector. The paper is organized as follows: first, we will discuss the mental health of people in the public sector; second, we will identify the factors that can contribute to mental health problems; and third, we will discuss some of the strategies that can be used to improve mental health in the public sector.

2. Methods

2.1. Sample

The sample for this study consisted of 100 people who were employed in the public sector. The sample was drawn from a larger study of the mental health of people in the public sector, which was conducted by the Mental Health Foundation (2000). The sample was selected using a stratified sampling method, in which the population was divided into strata based on a number of factors, including: age, sex, and type of employment. The sample was then drawn from each stratum in proportion to its size in the population.

The sample was selected from a number of public sector organizations, including: the NHS, local government, and the education sector. The sample was selected from a number of different types of employment, including: full-time, part-time, and casual. The sample was selected from a number of different age groups, including: 18-24, 25-34, 35-44, 45-54, 55-64, and 65+. The sample was selected from a number of different sexes, including: male and female.

the 1990s, the number of people in the UK who are aged 65 and over has increased by 1.5 million (1990–2000) and is projected to increase by a further 1.5 million by 2020 (Office for National Statistics 2001). The number of people aged 65 and over who are living alone has increased from 1.1 million in 1990 to 1.5 million in 2000 (Office for National Statistics 2001). The number of people aged 65 and over who are living alone is projected to increase to 2.0 million by 2020 (Office for National Statistics 2001).

There is a growing awareness of the need to address the needs of older people who are living alone. The Department of Health (2000) has identified the need to develop a national strategy for older people who are living alone. The strategy should focus on the needs of older people who are living alone and on the needs of their families and carers.
