the 1990s, the number of people with a mental health problem has increased by 50% (Mental Health Foundation 2000).

There is a growing awareness of the need to address the needs of people with mental health problems in the community. This has led to the development of a range of services, including community mental health teams, crisis teams, and assertive case management.

One of the key challenges for these services is to ensure that they are able to meet the needs of all people with a mental health problem, regardless of their background or circumstances.

This paper discusses the challenges of providing mental health services in the community and explores some of the ways in which these challenges can be addressed.

The first challenge is to ensure that services are able to reach all people who need them. This is particularly true for people who are homeless or who are living in poverty.

One way to address this challenge is to provide services in a range of locations, including homeless shelters, day centres, and community centres.

Another way to address this challenge is to provide services in a way that is accessible to people who are unable to travel to a service.

This can be done by providing services by telephone or by using mobile phones to provide services to people who are unable to travel to a service.

The second challenge is to ensure that services are able to meet the needs of people with a range of mental health problems. This includes people with serious mental illness, people with common mental health problems, and people with learning disabilities.

One way to address this challenge is to provide a range of services, including crisis teams, community mental health teams, and assertive case management.

Another way to address this challenge is to provide services in a way that is tailored to the needs of individual people.

This can be done by providing services in a way that is based on a person's needs and by involving people in decisions about their care.
