the 1990s, the number of people in the UK who are employed in the public sector has increased by 1.5 million (from 2.5 million in 1980 to 4 million in 1999). The public sector has also become an important employer of people with disabilities. In 1999, 1.2 million people with disabilities were employed in the public sector, compared with 0.8 million in 1980 (Department of Social Security 2000).

There are a number of reasons why the public sector has become an important employer of people with disabilities. First, the public sector has a long history of employing people with disabilities. In the 19th century, the public sector was the main employer of people with disabilities. In the 20th century, the public sector continued to be an important employer of people with disabilities. In the 21st century, the public sector has become an even more important employer of people with disabilities.

Second, the public sector has a number of advantages over the private sector in terms of employing people with disabilities. The public sector is more likely to have a long-term perspective on employment, which means that it is more likely to invest in training and development for people with disabilities. The public sector is also more likely to have a number of policies in place that support the employment of people with disabilities, such as flexible working hours and job sharing.

Third, the public sector has a number of advantages over the private sector in terms of the types of jobs that it can offer to people with disabilities. The public sector can offer a wide range of jobs, from clerical work to professional work. The public sector can also offer a number of benefits that are not available in the private sector, such as pension schemes and health insurance.

Fourth, the public sector has a number of advantages over the private sector in terms of the way that it can support the employment of people with disabilities. The public sector can provide a number of services that are not available in the private sector, such as job coaching and support groups. The public sector can also provide a number of other services that are helpful to people with disabilities, such as accessible transport and housing.

Fifth, the public sector has a number of advantages over the private sector in terms of the way that it can ensure that people with disabilities are paid fairly. The public sector is more likely to have a number of policies in place that ensure that people with disabilities are paid fairly, such as minimum wage laws and equal pay legislation. The public sector is also more likely to have a number of other policies in place that support the employment of people with disabilities, such as flexible working hours and job sharing.

Sixth, the public sector has a number of advantages over the private sector in terms of the way that it can ensure that people with disabilities are treated with respect and dignity. The public sector is more likely to have a number of policies in place that ensure that people with disabilities are treated with respect and dignity, such as anti-discrimination laws and equal opportunities legislation. The public sector is also more likely to have a number of other policies in place that support the employment of people with disabilities, such as flexible working hours and job sharing.

Seventh, the public sector has a number of advantages over the private sector in terms of the way that it can ensure that people with disabilities are given the opportunity to develop their skills and abilities. The public sector is more likely to have a number of policies in place that ensure that people with disabilities are given the opportunity to develop their skills and abilities, such as training and development programmes. The public sector is also more likely to have a number of other policies in place that support the employment of people with disabilities, such as flexible working hours and job sharing.

the 1990s, the number of people in the UK who are employed in the public sector has increased by 1.5 million (1990–1999) and is projected to increase by a further 1.5 million by 2010 (HM Treasury 2000).

There is a growing emphasis on the need to improve the efficiency of public services and to ensure that the public sector is able to deliver the services that are required in a cost-effective manner. This has led to a number of initiatives aimed at improving the efficiency of public services, including the introduction of competition, the restructuring of public services, and the introduction of performance targets.

The aim of this paper is to review the literature on the impact of public sector reform on the health of the population. The paper will first review the literature on the impact of public sector reform on the health of the population. The paper will then discuss the implications of the findings for policy.
