the 1990s, the number of people in the UK who are employed in the public sector has increased by 1.5 million, from 2.5 million in 1980 to 4 million in 1995 (Department of Health 1996).

There is a growing emphasis on the need to improve the efficiency of the public sector, and to ensure that the public sector is able to deliver the services that are required by the public. This has led to a number of initiatives, including the introduction of competition, the restructuring of public sector organisations, and the introduction of performance measures. The aim of these initiatives is to ensure that the public sector is able to deliver the services that are required by the public, in a cost-effective and efficient manner.

The aim of this paper is to review the literature on the impact of the public sector on the health of the population. The paper will focus on the impact of the public sector on the health of the population in the UK, and will consider the impact of the public sector on the health of the population in the context of the initiatives mentioned above.

The paper will first consider the impact of the public sector on the health of the population in the UK, and will then consider the impact of the public sector on the health of the population in the context of the initiatives mentioned above. The paper will conclude by discussing the implications of the findings for the future of the public sector.

The Health Care Act 1999 introduced a number of changes to the way in which the NHS is run. These changes included the introduction of the NHS Constitution, the introduction of the NHS Performance Framework, and the introduction of the NHS Complaints Procedure.

The NHS Constitution is a document that sets out the values and principles that guide the NHS. It also sets out the rights and responsibilities of patients, staff, and the public.

The NHS Performance Framework is a system of measures that are used to monitor and evaluate the performance of the NHS. It includes measures of patient safety, patient experience, and the quality of care.

The NHS Complaints Procedure is a system that allows patients to make complaints about the NHS. It is designed to be a fair and effective way of dealing with complaints.

the 1990s, the number of people in the UK who are employed in the public sector has increased by 1.5 million (from 2.5 million in 1980 to 4 million in 1995). The public sector has become a major employer in the UK, and this has implications for the way in which the public sector is managed and the way in which it is funded.

The public sector is a complex organisation, and it is difficult to understand how it works. The public sector is made up of many different organisations, each of which has its own objectives and its own way of working. The public sector is also a major employer in the UK, and this has implications for the way in which the public sector is managed and the way in which it is funded.

There is a growing emphasis on the need to improve the quality of services provided by the public sector. This has led to a number of initiatives, including the introduction of performance indicators, the establishment of public sector ombudsmen, and the implementation of the Freedom of Information Act. These initiatives are intended to ensure that the public sector is accountable to the public and that the quality of services is improved.

The public sector is also facing a number of challenges, including a growing demand for services, a shrinking budget, and a need to improve efficiency. These challenges are likely to continue in the future, and it will be important for the public sector to find ways to meet these challenges in a sustainable way.

The public sector is an important part of the UK economy and society. It provides a range of services that are essential for the well-being of the population. It is important that the public sector is able to meet the needs of the population in a sustainable way, and that it is able to improve the quality of services that it provides.

The public sector is facing a number of challenges, but it is also facing a number of opportunities. By working together, the public sector can meet the challenges of the future and provide a high quality of services to the population.

the 1990s, the number of people with a mental health problem has increased by 50% (Mental Health Foundation, 2000).

There is a growing awareness of the need to address the needs of people with mental health problems. The Department of Health (2000) has set out a vision for mental health care in the UK, and the NHS (2000) has set out a strategy for mental health care in England.

The aim of this paper is to review the current state of mental health care in the UK, and to discuss the challenges facing mental health care in the future.

The paper is organized as follows. First, we review the current state of mental health care in the UK. Second, we discuss the challenges facing mental health care in the future.

Finally, we discuss the implications of our findings for mental health care in the future.

There is a growing emphasis on the need to improve the efficiency of the public sector, and to ensure that the public sector is able to deliver the best possible value for money. This has led to a number of initiatives, including the introduction of competition, the restructuring of public services, and the introduction of new management practices.

One of the key challenges facing the public sector is the need to improve the efficiency of its operations. This involves a number of factors, including the need to reduce costs, improve the quality of services, and ensure that resources are used effectively.

There are a number of ways in which the efficiency of the public sector can be improved. These include the introduction of competition, the restructuring of public services, and the introduction of new management practices.

One of the key areas where efficiency can be improved is in the management of resources. This involves ensuring that resources are used effectively, and that there is no waste.

the 1990s, the number of people with a mental health problem has increased by 50% (Mental Health Foundation, 2000).

There is a growing awareness of the need to address the needs of people with mental health problems, and a number of initiatives have been developed to improve the lives of people with mental health problems. These include the development of mental health services, the development of mental health care plans, and the development of mental health care teams.

The purpose of this paper is to review the literature on the effectiveness of mental health care plans, and to discuss the implications for practice.

The paper is organized as follows. First, a brief overview of mental health care plans is provided. Then, the literature on the effectiveness of mental health care plans is reviewed. Finally, the implications for practice are discussed.

Mental health care plans are a key component of mental health care. They are a written document that outlines the goals and objectives of care for a person with a mental health problem.

Mental health care plans are developed by a mental health care team, which may include a psychiatrist, a psychologist, a social worker, and a nurse. The plan is then reviewed and updated regularly.

The purpose of a mental health care plan is to provide a clear and concise outline of the goals and objectives of care for a person with a mental health problem. It also provides a framework for the delivery of care.

Mental health care plans are used to guide the delivery of care, and to ensure that the care is tailored to the needs of the individual. They are also used to monitor the progress of care, and to evaluate the effectiveness of the care.

The literature on the effectiveness of mental health care plans is mixed. Some studies have found that mental health care plans are effective in improving the lives of people with mental health problems, while others have found that they are not effective.

One of the reasons for the mixed findings is that the studies have used different methods to evaluate the effectiveness of mental health care plans. Some studies have used self-report measures, while others have used objective measures.

Another reason for the mixed findings is that the studies have focused on different aspects of mental health care plans. Some studies have focused on the content of the plans, while others have focused on the process of developing the plans.

Despite the mixed findings, there is a growing awareness of the need to address the needs of people with mental health problems, and a number of initiatives have been developed to improve the lives of people with mental health problems.

These initiatives include the development of mental health services, the development of mental health care plans, and the development of mental health care teams. The literature on the effectiveness of mental health care plans is mixed. Some studies have found that mental health care plans are effective in improving the lives of people with mental health problems, while others have found that they are not effective.

One of the reasons for the mixed findings is that the studies have used different methods to evaluate the effectiveness of mental health care plans. Some studies have used self-report measures, while others have used objective measures.

Another reason for the mixed findings is that the studies have focused on different aspects of mental health care plans. Some studies have focused on the content of the plans, while others have focused on the process of developing the plans.

Despite the mixed findings, there is a growing awareness of the need to address the needs of people with mental health problems, and a number of initiatives have been developed to improve the lives of people with mental health problems.

These initiatives include the development of mental health services, the development of mental health care plans, and the development of mental health care teams. The purpose of this paper is to review the literature on the effectiveness of mental health care plans, and to discuss the implications for practice.

The paper is organized as follows. First, a brief overview of mental health care plans is provided. Then, the literature on the effectiveness of mental health care plans is reviewed. Finally, the implications for practice are discussed.

Mental health care plans are a key component of mental health care. They are a written document that outlines the goals and objectives of care for a person with a mental health problem.

Mental health care plans are developed by a mental health care team, which may include a psychiatrist, a psychologist, a social worker, and a nurse. The plan is then reviewed and updated regularly.

The purpose of a mental health care plan is to provide a clear and concise outline of the goals and objectives of care for a person with a mental health problem. It also provides a framework for the delivery of care.

the 1990s, the number of people in the UK with a mental health problem has increased by 50% (Mental Health Act 1983, 1990).

There is a growing awareness of the need to improve the lives of people with mental health problems. The Department of Health (1999) has set out a vision of a new mental health system, which will be based on the following principles:

- People with mental health problems should be treated as individuals, with their own needs and wishes.

- People with mental health problems should be given the opportunity to participate in decisions about their care and treatment.

- People with mental health problems should be given the opportunity to live in the community, rather than in hospital.

- People with mental health problems should be given the opportunity to work, study, and take part in the activities of everyday life.

- People with mental health problems should be given the opportunity to live in a safe and secure environment.

- People with mental health problems should be given the opportunity to live in a community that is supportive and caring.

- People with mental health problems should be given the opportunity to live in a community that is free from discrimination and prejudice.
