the 1990s, the number of people in the UK who are employed in the public sector has increased by 1.5 million (from 2.5 million in 1980 to 4 million in 1999). The public sector has become a major employer in the UK, and this has implications for the way in which the public sector is managed and the way in which it is funded.

The public sector is a complex and diverse entity, and it is difficult to define it precisely. However, it can be described as the part of the economy that is owned and controlled by the state. It includes a wide range of activities, from the provision of health care and education to the provision of social security and the management of public infrastructure.

The public sector is a major source of employment in the UK, and it is also a major source of revenue for the state. The public sector is funded by a variety of sources, including taxes, borrowing, and the sale of assets.

There is a growing emphasis on the need to improve the efficiency of the public sector, and to ensure that the public sector is able to deliver the services that are required by the public. This has led to a number of initiatives, including the introduction of competition, the restructuring of public sector organisations, and the introduction of performance measures. The aim of these initiatives is to ensure that the public sector is able to deliver the services that are required by the public, in a cost-effective and efficient manner.

The aim of this paper is to review the literature on the impact of these initiatives on the public sector, and to discuss the implications for the future of the public sector.

The paper is organised as follows. Section 2 discusses the impact of competition on the public sector. Section 3 discusses the impact of restructuring on the public sector. Section 4 discusses the impact of performance measures on the public sector. Section 5 discusses the implications for the future of the public sector.

2. The impact of competition on the public sector

The introduction of competition into the public sector has been a major initiative in the 1990s. This has led to a number of changes in the way that public sector organisations operate, and has had a significant impact on the public sector.

The introduction of competition has led to a number of changes in the way that public sector organisations operate. These changes include the introduction of competition for contracts, the introduction of competition for staff, and the introduction of competition for resources.

The introduction of competition for contracts has led to a number of changes in the way that public sector organisations operate. These changes include the introduction of competitive tendering, the introduction of competitive dialogue, and the introduction of competitive procurement.

The introduction of competition for staff has led to a number of changes in the way that public sector organisations operate. These changes include the introduction of open recruitment, the introduction of open competition, and the introduction of open selection.

the 1990s, the number of people in the world who are under 15 years of age has increased by 1.2 billion (United Nations 1999). The number of children in the world is projected to increase to 2.5 billion by the year 2025 (United Nations 1999). The United Nations (1999) also predicts that the number of children in the world will increase to 3.5 billion by the year 2050.

There are a number of factors that are likely to contribute to the increase in the number of children in the world. One of the most important factors is the increase in life expectancy. As life expectancy increases, the number of children who survive to adulthood increases. This is because more children are surviving to the age of 15, and more children are surviving to the age of 20. This is also true for children who survive to the age of 25 and beyond.

Another factor that is likely to contribute to the increase in the number of children in the world is the increase in the number of children who are born to women who are under 20 years of age. This is because more women are having children at a younger age, and more women are having children who are under 15 years of age. This is also true for women who are having children who are under 20 years of age.
