the 1990s, the number of people in the UK who are employed in the public sector has increased by 1.5 million, from 2.5 million in 1980 to 4 million in 1995 (Department of Health 1996).

There is a growing emphasis on the need to improve the efficiency of the public sector, and to ensure that the public sector is able to deliver the services that are required by the public. This has led to a number of initiatives, including the introduction of competition, the restructuring of public sector organisations, and the introduction of performance targets. The aim of these initiatives is to ensure that the public sector is able to deliver the services that are required by the public, in a cost-effective and efficient manner.

One of the key challenges facing the public sector is the need to improve the efficiency of the public sector. This is a complex task, and one that requires a number of different approaches. One approach is to introduce competition, which can help to drive down costs and improve efficiency. Another approach is to restructure public sector organisations, so that they are able to deliver services in a more efficient manner. A third approach is to introduce performance targets, which can help to ensure that public sector organisations are able to deliver the services that are required by the public, in a cost-effective and efficient manner.

Another approach is to restructure public sector organisations, so that they are able to deliver services in a more efficient manner. A third approach is to introduce performance targets, which can help to ensure that public sector organisations are able to deliver the services that are required by the public, in a cost-effective and efficient manner.

There is a growing emphasis on the need to improve the efficiency of the public sector, and to ensure that the public sector is able to deliver the services that are required by the public. This has led to a number of initiatives, including the introduction of competition, the restructuring of public sector organisations, and the introduction of performance targets. The aim of these initiatives is to ensure that the public sector is able to deliver the services that are required by the public, in a cost-effective and efficient manner.

One of the key challenges facing the public sector is the need to improve the efficiency of the public sector. This is a complex task, and one that requires a number of different approaches. One approach is to introduce competition, which can help to drive down costs and improve efficiency. Another approach is to restructure public sector organisations, so that they are able to deliver services in a more efficient manner. A third approach is to introduce performance targets, which can help to ensure that public sector organisations are able to deliver the services that are required by the public, in a cost-effective and efficient manner.

the 1990s, the number of people in the UK who are employed in the public sector has increased by 1.5 million (from 2.5 million in 1980 to 4 million in 1995). The public sector has become a major employer in the UK, and this has implications for the way in which the public sector is managed and the way in which it is funded.

The public sector is a complex organisation, and it is difficult to understand how it works. The public sector is made up of many different organisations, each of which has its own aims and objectives. The public sector is also a major employer in the UK, and this has implications for the way in which the public sector is managed and the way in which it is funded.
