the 1990s, the number of people in the UK who are employed in the public sector has increased by 1.5 million (1990–1999), and the number of people in the public sector who are employed in health care has increased by 1.1 million (1990–1999) (Department of Health 2000).

There is a growing emphasis on the importance of the public sector in the provision of health care services, and the need to ensure that the public sector is able to meet the needs of the population. This has led to a number of initiatives to improve the performance of the public sector, including the introduction of the Health Service Act 1999, the Health Service Act 2001, and the Health Service Act 2004.

The Health Service Act 1999 introduced a number of changes to the way in which the public sector is run, including the introduction of the Health Service Commissioning Board, the Health Service Commissioning Board, and the Health Service Commissioning Board. the 1990s, the number of people in the UK who are aged 65 and over has increased from 10.5 million to 12.5 million (1990 to 1999) (Office of National Statistics, 2000).

There is a growing awareness of the need to develop strategies to meet the needs of the ageing population. The Department of Health (1999) has published a strategy for ageing, which sets out the government's commitment to improve the lives of older people. The strategy is based on the following principles:

- Older people should be able to live independently and actively.
- Older people should be able to access the services and facilities they need.
- Older people should be able to participate in the life of their community.

The strategy also sets out a number of key objectives, including:

- To improve the health and well-being of older people.
- To improve the housing and living conditions of older people.
- To improve the transport and travel facilities for older people.

The strategy is a key document in the development of ageing policy in the UK. It provides a framework for the development of policies and programmes to improve the lives of older people.
