the 1990s, the number of people in the UK who are employed in the public sector has increased by 1.5 million, from 2.5 million in 1980 to 4 million in 1999 (Department of Health 2000).

There is a growing emphasis on the need to improve the efficiency of the public sector, and to ensure that the public sector is able to deliver the best possible value for money. This has led to a number of initiatives, including the introduction of competition, the restructuring of public services, and the introduction of new management practices. These initiatives have led to a number of changes in the way that public services are delivered, and have led to a number of improvements in the efficiency of the public sector.

One of the key challenges facing the public sector is the need to improve the efficiency of the public sector, and to ensure that the public sector is able to deliver the best possible value for money. This has led to a number of initiatives, including the introduction of competition, the restructuring of public services, and the introduction of new management practices. These initiatives have led to a number of changes in the way that public services are delivered, and have led to a number of improvements in the efficiency of the public sector.

Another key challenge facing the public sector is the need to improve the quality of the public sector, and to ensure that the public sector is able to deliver the best possible quality of service. This has led to a number of initiatives, including the introduction of quality management systems, the introduction of new standards, and the introduction of new management practices. These initiatives have led to a number of changes in the way that public services are delivered, and have led to a number of improvements in the quality of the public sector.

A third key challenge facing the public sector is the need to improve the accessibility of the public sector, and to ensure that the public sector is able to deliver the best possible accessibility of service. This has led to a number of initiatives, including the introduction of accessibility standards, the introduction of new management practices, and the introduction of new management practices. These initiatives have led to a number of changes in the way that public services are delivered, and have led to a number of improvements in the accessibility of the public sector.

Finally, a fourth key challenge facing the public sector is the need to improve the sustainability of the public sector, and to ensure that the public sector is able to deliver the best possible sustainability of service. This has led to a number of initiatives, including the introduction of sustainability standards, the introduction of new management practices, and the introduction of new management practices. These initiatives have led to a number of changes in the way that public services are delivered, and have led to a number of improvements in the sustainability of the public sector.

In conclusion, the public sector is facing a number of challenges, and is taking a number of initiatives to address these challenges. These initiatives have led to a number of changes in the way that public services are delivered, and have led to a number of improvements in the efficiency, quality, accessibility, and sustainability of the public sector. It is hoped that these initiatives will continue to lead to further improvements in the public sector, and that the public sector will be able to deliver the best possible value for money, quality of service, accessibility of service, and sustainability of service.

the 1990s, the number of people in the world who are undernourished has increased from 600 million to 800 million (FAO 2001). The number of people who are obese has increased from 100 million in 1975 to 300 million in 2000 (WHO 2000).

Obesity is a complex condition, with many causes. It is a multifactorial disease, with genetic, environmental, and behavioural factors all contributing to its development. The prevalence of obesity has increased in many countries, and this is a major public health problem.

Obesity is a major risk factor for many chronic diseases, including heart disease, stroke, diabetes, and certain cancers. It is also associated with many other health problems, such as sleep apnoea, osteoarthritis, and depression.
